Today's classified staff shoulder far more responsibilities than their titles suggest. In fact, many support staff professionals have taken on more duties and need the skills and knowledge traditionally thought of as management tools. At the Central Valley's premier conference for classified staff, we cultivate community, inspire growth, and empower leadership development. In celebration of those who support school districts and municipalities throughout the Valley, we have a wonderful program planned this year. The conference includes a delicious breakfast, motivational keynote speaker, fantastic vendors, breakout sessions designed to support personal and professional development, and the opportunity to network with support staff from throughout the Valley!

Cultivating Community

Keynote

Jeff Utecht is an educational and leadership consultant who has spent more than 15 years working with school districts, county offices of education, and state departments across the United States and internationally. A former classroom teacher and district leader, Jeff understands the realities of public education, from the pressures facing administrators to the essential role classified staff play in keeping schools running every day.

Conference attendees will register for either April 28 or April 29. Registration opens March 25 and closes April 17.
